OLDHAM HULME GRAMMAR SCHOOL

ANNUAL SPEECH NIGHT

5 November 2014 at 7.15pm

PROGRAMME

Oldham Hulme Grammar School and the Great War

When war was declared on 4th August 1914, the young men and women of Great Britain did not hesitate to offer to serve their King and country. They retained the ideals of their forefathers and believed that they must fight to preserve the British way of life. In 1914 Oldham Hulme Grammar School had 800 old boys who were, or would become during the war years, eligible to serve in the armed forces.

The school has a voluntary archive team who are currently undertaking a Great War Research Project. Examining the 200 names currently researched, all but a few old boys volunteered and signed up for military service during the first months of the war. It must be remembered that Britain had a voluntary army until conscription was introduced in January 1916. A surprisingly large number of Hulmeians were already members of territorial battalions, notably the 10th (Oldham) Battalion of the Manchester Regiment, where both lower ranks and officers were well represented by old boys. Of the 26 officers embarking in September 1914, nine were old boys of this school. The 10th Battalion served in Egypt until May 1915 when they were transferred to the appalling conditions of the Dardenelles, Turkey. The "Black Day" in the history of Oldham was June 4th, when large numbers of Oldham families lost husbands, sons and brothers on the infamous peninsula of Gallipoli. By the time they returned to Egypt, the majority of the original men of the battalion had been either killed or sent home, suffering from disease or incapacitated by wounds.

Although some of our old boys remained in school for the full seven years before going to university to study Medicine, Law, Chemistry, Theology or Classics, this was not common practice a hundred years ago. The majority of boys came to the school for three years from the age of 12 to 15, after which they would leave to take up a seven year apprenticeship which was the standard route into most types of employment. They began as a junior and worked their way up in the company, whether as engineers, accountants, or cotton mill secretaries and salesmen. They learned from a master craftsman during the day and then would study at evening classes to enhance their academic knowledge of the subject. At the end of their apprenticeship they would often secure the award of a bachelor degree or other qualification. Therefore, most of our old boys had been working for some years before they reached the armed forces enlistment age of 18.

As expected, the Manchester Regiment was the first choice of many old boys (26%), particularly the 10th Battalion (Oldham Territorials) and the 24th Battalion (Oldham Comrades or Pals). Pals regiments were a very popular way in which young men from the same communities could volunteer and serve alongside their friends. However a significant number chose the Public School Battalions of the Royal Fusiliers (13%). When these latter battalions were disbanded in 1916, many of the men were granted commissions into the Manchester Regiment. While the Royal Garrison Artillery, Royal Field Artillery, Royal Army Service Corps, Royal Army Medical Corps, Lancashire Fusiliers, West Riding Regiment and Royal Engineers are all represented by between 4% and 10% of old boys, there are a further 21 regiments in which an old boy served, ranging in geographical location from the Northumberland Fusiliers to the Royal Sussex Regiment and the Canadian Machine Gun Corps. A number of old boys who were working overseas or had emigrated, returned to serve in local regiments.

While nearly all men who joined the army were destined for the front lines, a few were hand picked for other war work. Two chemistry students were transferred to the Royal Engineers as 'anti gas' officers. They were responsible for teaching troops in the use of anti gas equipment, securing stocks of gas appliances captured from the enemy and, in some cases, researching the chemical components of the gas and designing means of protection. A mechanical engineer was transferred to the Royal Munitions Factory at Greenock to take charge of design, and a mechanic was transferred back to his home in Hollinwood to work in the Park Bridge foundry and munitions factory.

Surprisingly, for a land locked town, there were seven men who went to sea with the Royal Navy, Merchant Navy, Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Navy Volunteer Reserve. From 1917 onwards a number of men transferred from the army to the Royal Flying Corps, which in 1918 became the Royal Air Force.

The Great War and the Hulme Grammar School for Girls

For many of our old girls the war years were spent with sole responsibility for their family's welfare; while they agonised over their husbands and brothers serving overseas, they knitted socks, scarves and jumpers for the troops.

For younger women, unencumbered by children, the war years brought an opportunity. Many old girls, in order to release men for the front lines, took positions as clerks in their father's offices, in banks, and in railway and mill offices. Three girls worked making munitions. A large number of young women joined the Voluntary Aid Detachments to work as nurses and cooks providing field nursing services, mainly in local hospitals such as Woodfield and Abbeyhills. Some young women served overseas, whilst others who were already qualified, worked in professions as teachers, doctors and nurses. By 1919, the school Roll of Honour listed 64 girls who worked in the VAD.

In 1915, Edith Marjorie Martland qualified as a surgeon and, after a year as resident physician at the Victoria Hospital, Chelsea, she volunteered for a position at the Scottish Women's Unit at Royaumont, France. She spent two years there and at the hospital at Villers-Cotterets where she was second in command. The hospital in the old abbey at Royaumont, which had been set up with help from the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies and the French Red Cross, was staffed almost entirely by women. Being close to the front line it was heavily shelled in May 1917 and she was awarded the French Croix de Guerre for "skill and devotion to the French and Allied wounded under repeated bombardment."

Oldham Hulme Grammar School and Remembrance

Twenty-five men (of the 200 currently researched) were awarded medals for their gallantry. One member of staff and sixty-four old boys lost their lives, including three pairs of brothers. The first two old boys to die were lost to pneumonia while training in the UK. While the majority (38) were killed in France, 10 died in the UK, 8 in Belgium, 4 in Gallipoli, 2 in Iraq, 2 in Greece and 1 in Egypt. The names of forty-nine old boys are inscribed on a bronze tablet in the hall, including the names of three old boys who we now know survived the war. A games pavilion was erected by the Old Boys' Association as a memorial to the fallen, and a processional cross, which was formerly used at Founders' Day and Remembrance services, was presented in tribute to two Hulmeians who were brothers.

The Needham Memorial Trophy is awarded to the winning house in the House Competition at this Speech Night. This elegant trophy was presented to the Oldham Hulme Grammar School by Keith Needham (who attended the school between 1900 and 1904) in memory of his father, Sir George W Needham (a governor of the school between 1902 and 1928) and his brother Lieutenant G G Needham who attended the school between 1904 and 1907. George Geoffrey Needham joined the 1st Battalion, The Lancashire Fusiliers and died of wounds received at Suvla Bay at Gallipoli in Turkey on 22 August 1915. Lieutenant Needham had been awarded a Military Cross and the family home was at 'Holly Bank', Werneth, Oldham.

Over the years a service of remembrance, taken originally by the school's chaplain and in later years by the Principal, has been held annually at school, usually on the Monday following 11th November. Representatives from the school's combined cadet force are present, a member of which would renew the poppy wreath hung above the two war memorials, to the accompaniment of a trumpet playing the Last Post.

It is to be hoped that the determination, courage and sacrifice displayed not only by the old boys and old girls of this school, but also by the people of the United Kingdom, will be forever remembered by future generations of pupils.
